In modern computing, storage and data processing, there is an explosion in the amount of digital data produced and stored. This ever-increasing demand for digital data storage is due, at least in part, to digital photography. As the usefulness of image capturing becomes more popular, there are numerous needs for capturing digital images that are not being met. For example, from an individual's point of view, it is desirable to be able to capture and store images on a wide variety of storage devices, such as film-based cameras, digital still cameras, and digital video cameras. To a consumer, it is desirable to be able to capture and store images on a wide variety of storage devices, such as a digital still camera, a digital video camera, a single piece of card, or multiple pieces of card. Regardless of the storage capacity, from an individual's perspective, it is desirable to be able to capture and store images for a relatively long time period. For consumers, it is desirable to be able to capture and store images for a long time period. In this field, it is desirable to meet these needs. A need exists, however, for a digital image capture and image storage system that meets these needs and allows a user to capture and store images using a variety of devices with varying capabilities. { "id": "83299", "name": "Ubuntu", "full_name": "Ubuntu", "owner": {
