With the Spot Healing Tool, you can quickly fix pixelation and other issues in a picture. The Spot Healing Tool works with a selection, which is a highlighted area of pixels that define a shape. (You may need to draw a selection around the area you want to correct.) You may be able to see a selection you made in a recent image; if so, it will be active. Otherwise, click the Color Samples button (the square with the arrow, at the top of the Tools panel) to display a small palette of colors that are good candidates for a spot, and then click the color. To select an object, use one of your selection tools. Here are the steps to using the Spot Healing Tool: 1. Choose Tools → Spot Healing Tool. The Spot Healing Tool, like all selection tools, appears in the Toolbox with the name indicated at the bottom of the window. 2. Click the image preview to select the area to be healed. The Spot Healing Tool is like a laser pointer, following the outlines of your selection. 3. Click the spot on your image that needs fixing. The tool selects that area of pixels, and the color palette highlights that color. 4. Click the Fix option button. The invention relates to a device for producing a flat product from a cylindrical roll of thermoplastic film, and in particular a multi-layer can for containing food or other similar products. More specifically, the invention relates to a product-producing device of this type, which is arranged behind a conveyor system and which can continuously produce a pre-metered film strip which is placed directly over the conveyor system. Devices of this type are known from DE-GM 70 05 169 and DE 39 20 581 C1, in which a product-producing device is provided with a conveyor belt, which is supported over a plurality of guide rollers and is guided over different guide profiles on a curved path and a straight path. The product-producing device is arranged directly behind the conveyor system, below the conveyor system, and it is equipped with a stretching apparatus and a transfer apparatus. The stretching apparatus consists of a roller which is rotatably mounted and whose interior is equipped with a nip, and also of a pressing means which engages the nip and is attached to the end face of the nip roll, and for the purpose of maintaining the nip the pressing means is surrounded on the end face by a pressure sleeve. The conveyor system is displaced in the direction of rolling of the nip roll relative to the nip. The transfer apparatus consists of at least one strip-like product guide roller and a strip-like web transfer apparatus, which is arranged above the product-producing device. The web transfer apparatus is provided with a plurality of web transfer rollers which are guided below the product-producing device in the direction of rolling. The nip roll rolls together with the guide profiles, the web transfer rollers and the rollers of the product guide roller, the web and the product strip having to be guided through between the nip roll and the guide profiles. In DE 39 20 581 C1, the product guide roller is arranged offset to the right relative to the strip center. The nip roll is offset to the left relative to the guide profiles and is not connected with the nip roll, but instead there is a separate drive for rotating the nip roll in the drive direction. A principal disadvantage of the known devices is that, in the case of relatively wide rolls of film web, the web can be wrapped around the nip roll roll. The web-side edge of the roll is then no longer guided around the guide profiles and the web can be wrapped back around the [Plasmapheresis in acute hyper-IgM syndrome]. A 3-year-old girl with hyper-IgM syndrome was admitted to our hospital because of high fever and a skin rash. She also showed hepatosplenomegaly and marked elevation of serum transaminase and LDH levels, which were not normalized by the administration of prednisolone. Since these abnormalities were not improved by intensive medical treatments, plasmapheresis was performed on day 15. After two sessions of plasmapheresis, the abnormally high level of serum IgG was decreased to normal, and the skin rash and hepatosplenomegaly improved without serious side effects. In June 2013, researchers at the University of Graz carried out an analysis of how healthy children and adults age in two processes: their brain changes, and their physical abilities degrade and might even disappear. In the light of such findings, scientists and doctors put forward a hypothesis: the older we get, the less we are capable of generating new neural cells. This causes our brain to shrink and eventually stops producing new synapses. For over 40 years, the idea that human brains naturally age and shrink has been confirmed. This, however, affects some areas more than others. The temporal lobe in the medial brain is characterized by a considerable loss of functional capacity, especially its language areas. But why is this so? Physicists and neuroscientists from the University of Graz and the Max Planck Institute for Brain Research in Frankfurt, Germany, have now come to the conclusion that the aging human brain leads to an alteration of the circadian rhythm. In this way, scientists were able to explain the gradual loss of memory in the elderly. The scientists have been able to show that certain processes in the brain function throughout the day. “New synapses are generated in the brain at certain times and eliminate older ones,” says Prof. Dr. Norbert Grimm from the University of Graz. However, this process of removing and replacing neuronal connections slows down with age. This leads to a change in the circadian rhythm. “Compared to younger people, there is a reduction in the secretion of an hormone at the same time as the amount of functional brain matter is decreasing,” says Prof. Dr. Falk Lorch from the Max Planck Institute for Brain Research in Frankfurt. And, together with their colleagues from the Max Planck Institute for Human Cognitive and Brain Sciences in Leipzig
