the top 100 firms were hired to lobby on healthcare reform in 2015, an OpenSecrets.org analysis shows. The average spent for lobbying on the healthcare law was $11,704. Just look at the top three healthcare lobbying firms in the chart below, which focuses on lobbying expenditures (not total lobbying revenues) on health care.

The Health Care Lobbyists of 2015 The top three healthcare lobbying firms have been working in tandem to favor action on ObamaCare. The top firm is Akin Gump, which has hired 54 staffers to work on health care reform since 2011. (Yes, you read that right:

54.) Akin Gump has also hired many staffers to work on immigration and other pieces of the DREAM Act. The second most active healthcare lobbying firm is Quinn Gillespie & Associates, which has hired at least 24 staff members to work on health care. The most active firm, however, is Brafman, Long and Gallagher, which has 27 staffers focused on health care. That's a marked increase from the 4 staffers the firm had working on health care in 2014. The total number of staffers working on health care has grown markedly in the last three years. However, the top three firms are actually no different from firms who spent more time working on health care in 2011 and 2012.

part of your job search. Fortunately, most places have a standard format you're expected to adhere to, and it's easy to make changes to your online profile and cover letter to reflect your interests and personality, as well as the type of position you're applying for. Again, most of this should be left to your personal brand, but here's a primer on what each section should
